

Teaching students with special needs - Scenarios

Scenario #1

- You don't know what to do with your students.
- It is difficult to teach them and hold their attention.
 - Also, their ability levels are so different that it is difficult for you to design lessons that meet their needs.

Scenario #2

-You've been spending time befriending the students. One of them tells you that their parents, brothers, and sisters don't suffer the same disability. The student then asks you, "Why did this happen to me?"

Scenario #3

-When you enter a class, the student appears distressed and refuses to be taught by you. What can you do?
